Correction Of The Connection

The wisdom of Kabbalah speaks only about the correction of the connection between us.

We are not able to receive any discernment, summary, account, or feeling, if it doesn't come from the attempt to connect, from the effort. This is the place of correction, the place for clarification. Where can I see the place for Gmar Tikkun (End of Correction)? I see it only in the place of the scattering. The changes can only be where I locate a break that needs correction.

The break, the correction, and the change of my state are only in the connection between the souls, as we learn. Thus, the books of Kabbalah write only concerning those who are in a group and want to locate their relation to the group, their place in the network of connection between the souls. Then the Torah, the Light, helps one discover this and also to reach being as "one man with one heart."

Man is related to only on condition that he agrees to reach Arvut (mutual guarantee). This is the basic condition: Does he have the tendency for correction? If yes, then man must be among ten people, at least, who yearn to be connected, who yearn to build between them a spiritual system.

If these conditions don't progress, then man has no connection to what the Torah speaks about, since the wisdom of Kabbalah speaks only about the correction of the connection between us.

Honoring HaShem (Creator)

What is the meaning of the concept of “honor” according to the wisdom of Kabbalah?

In the wisdom of Kabbalah, the meaning of “honor” is the honoring of HaShem (Creator), the greatness of the Creator, the greatness of the attribute of bestowal and love of others in the eyes of man. To the extent that man is ready to annul his ego in relation to the Creator, then accordingly, the honor that he gives Him is measured.
