The Law of Equivalence of Form

It is worthwhile for a woman who studies to bring her husband, who doesn't study, to the Convention?

Concerning a woman who studies Kabbalah, and her husband doesn't, or has just started studying: One needs to think whether to bring him or not, and if yes, then to which part. Each woman knows her husband and can decide if she should bring him and which part is suitable for him: the lectures, the cultural evenings, the meals, or maybe only to be outside in the surrounding area, (for coffee, the book stalls, live music performances, etc.)

A person operates according to the law of equivalence of form, so she has to think about what is best for him, what complements him better, what he would like, so that he can get into it slowly. According to this one should decide.
