If Many Are Studying

If many are studying, then the clarification is done only on the way to attain the force of good.

Rabash wrote that the group needs to consist of at least ten men. If less than this, there won't be enough differences of opinions and arguments to rise above and connect. If there are disputes in the group, one must stop everything and be involved only in the study and discuss how to rise above the disputes. One doesn't need to clarify the bad relations. The clarification is only on the way to attain the force of good.
